Law, Criminal Justice, and Society Major

www.CGS.Pitt.edu/Law-Criminal-Justice-And-Society-BA

Revised: 04/2021

Are you considering law school or graduate study in the social sciences after Pitt? Are you interested in pursuing a career in one of the many criminal justice professions or advocacy organizations? The Law, Criminal Justice, and Society (LCJS) major examines the workings of the criminal justice system in the broader context of society and the legal system. A core curriculum fosters comprehension and critical analysis of the legal system, criminological theory, criminal justice institutions, criminal law, and social inequality. Students also will complete six credits of professional skills and a capstone course on ethics in criminal justice. The LCJS major equips students with the knowledge and skills they need to pursue advanced degrees in law and social science, and to succeed as professionals and advocates in the justice-oriented professions and organizations that serve American society's diverse and dynamic communities. This major is offered jointly between the Dietrich School and the College of General Studies.

Students completing this major will:

- examine the major institutions of the criminal justice system, and situate the workings of these institutions in a broader legal, social, and historical context;
- develop knowledge and legal reasoning skills in criminal law;
- examine the law's conflicting role in securing social order and security, on the one hand, and in creating and reinforcing social inequality on the other; and,
- develop basic professional knowledge and demonstrate ethical reasoning in preparation for being positive and successful contributors to law and justice-oriented career fields as professionals and/or public policy advocates.
